Above are two of my five screens that I am in charge of working on.

The first is the packages screen. This is where the user will select a package of their choosing (ranging in tiers) and will also have the option to register their student details which will allow for significant discounts on all packages as long as their academic status is verified.

The second is the checkout screen where the user's details are entered. The details will primarily be things relating to personal information such as card details and their address. On the right hand side of the screen all current purchase and discount information will be shown, with the option to complete their enrolment into courses that are available in their package set.

These are just test layouts to see what works best. Below are the color options we have available.

Our group has taken a liking to the third color scheme that has a lot of blue present so currently that is our main option for our designs.

REFLECTION

ROLE IN THE GROUP:

My current roles in the project are being in charge of the packages and billing pages on the website. All screens relating to transactions that happen on the website are my job to make. Functions such as allowing a student to verify their academic status, input personal and financial details such as address and account information are all within the scope of my section in the website.

I am also the team communicator as decided by my group leader. What this means is that I took the initiative to create viable and logical methods of communication between the group.

This includes: creating a Discord server with channels dedicated to resources we use as a group, an updates channel that is webhooked to our GitHub repo to allow any pull requests to show as popups and creating polls over either GitHub or WhatsApp to allow for more group decisions even if meetings aren't happening on the day.

EXPERIENCE:

My opinion on the current experience in this group is that there is little communication happening even though I've created so many channels to allow for constant communication and updates. I am not group leader but I feel as though I have to be the one to correct errors, fix mistakes and assign tasks. I'm working on conveying this to my group as I don't feel it is fair that I am "running" the group when no such task is required. The work requires input from everyone including starting conversations or asking questions, not just one person to verify whether someone's work is "good" or up to par.
